DISC is the universal language of behaviors and emotions. DISC offers people a common framework for identifying observable behavior styles and a common language to enter into effective communications. DISC has four styles: dominant, influence, steadiness and compliance. These styles tend to exhibit some of the following qualities: forceful and direct, optimistic and fun, steady and patient or precise and focused. Through DISC more productive and effective encounters occur. DISC succeeds in shifting paradigms and transforming relationships.

Utilizing a quantitative, validated report, this session unlocks the mystery of interpersonal communication and relationship building. The participant's individual twenty-four page report will include communication style analysis with graphs and charts to illuminate keys to increasing interpersonal and team effectiveness.
